

ON WISDOM

What is wisdom, what and who measures it if the use of the mind is as it has been described?

To truly comprehend one of the various sciences is wisdom - or maybe it isn't, because it should be related to what is correlated to it, in a sort of obligatory bond with the concept that "all things are connectable." Is there anything that is not connectable? Even if there was something that was not connectable, it would be science and consciousness.

Is it possible to transmit wisdom? To transmit it to others is not possible. Let us utilize a few "useless words" to relate it to those who can only intuit it, but not understand it.

All the sciences are marvelous, in all of their aspects, but is anyone capable of seeing them all? No.

Maybe the events that happen to people, whatever events they may be, force them to place the event and what they have studied in relation to something they are familiar with. Therefore within themselves, in their own way, they relate, connect, elaborate... but that remains science and knowledge, and wisdom remains just a word.

A harmony between all things exists, in perfect relation it organizes every event; a perceivable interaction exists, that can become known by the consciousness of sentient beings at a specific moment in their evolution. An entanglement (interaction) exists between particles (the spin of quarks); atomic, molecular, magnetic interactions exist together with various types of empathies, therefore an "inconceivable harmonic interaction" must also exist. The intuition of the Universal System will not only be based on knowledge and science, it may be an intuition which comes forth from the point of view of the human mind, the intellect (where science has been placed), therefore from entanglement; an intuition which begins from what we can define as the Universal Mind.

We can call the magnificent fusion of the Two Minds a "sentient being-antenna" wisdom. These "sentient being-antennas" fuse what is of the earth and what is universal within themselves, but they suffer due to the separation of those who cannot bask in this harmony. How would sentient beings who live through solely through earthly knowledge and science appear upon examination? They would seem strange, crazy, stupid, silly, ignorant, distant from reality.

Countless realities exist, one for each sentient being. The Truth only lies deeply within those who, connected, remain increasingly separated from those who only experience their own personal realities; unable to experience the "inconceivable harmonic interaction," they condemn what they do not know, because they are afraid of it. The more a sentient being is distant from this harmony, the more they condemn everyone and everything, unaware of the fact that they are condemning themselves. Believing themselves to be separated, they attempt to separate the Universal Harmony. How can they? Yet they are right to do this. They will learn from their errors, it is their right to experiment.